The 'sister' exhibition showing concurrently with Cymreictod — Welsh Women aims to highlight portraits that exist in Permanent Collections throughout Wales not only in Galleries and Museums, but also portraits in private and public collections that are often at risk because of the lack of adequate funding to conserve and show them. It is also hoped this exhibition will emphasise the need to support contemporary portraiture in Wales and will help to encourage the building of a Welsh National Portrait Gallery.

'Sister' Exhibitions of portraits from their Permanent Collections will be exhibited at

Point of Departure

How
to articulate
Wales? to chant the sough of the wind on the morsa, relate the mabinogi of the plough?

What
images point here?
Sing the polyglot
sea and the sculptured, listening ear of the quarry, the wheat's gavotte.

Sing
the smooth sands' face,
the blank, unruffled wing of the evening. Wales is a place to write on: slate for incising,

air
unsigned, and night
like a blackboard there over Eryri, where in chalks of light tomorrow will canticle and flare.

Dart,
then, words—shining sharp and obsidian. Art
must fit and flight from its bow-taut harp precisions of the clumsy heart.

CYMREICTOD — WELSH WOMEN

A consciousness of feeling, being Welsh. A search for an identity within the diverse culture of Wales. An industrial valley upbringing has left a deep and irreversible imprint on my life. Now, living in a rural area of Welsh speaking Wales steeped in ancient literature, music, myths and language, I am attempting through this exhibition to understand these diversities of Welsh life. This search expresses itself in part through the paintings and drawings of Welsh Women, being an acknowledgement of the contribution women have made to the social, political and cultural life of Wales, both locally and nationally.

This series of portraits is punctuated by images that are, in effect, narrative self portraits, they speak of my consciousness of being, feeling Welsh-Cymreictod.

Chris Kinsey

looking at space created artificially, the subject bounces throughout each nervous cell,

eyes round

the look follows as the subject moves away, round as decorated piers, plain as perpendicular decoration,
the essence is conversation carried on by people in rooms full of confessions taken from emotional experiences symbolised in colour, shape, line, form so personal the evidence of study is remote

the squared vision enters loops over folds and underlates through the obscurity of reasoning, to produce images that manifest more questions and few answers.

Ymwybyddiaeth o fod yn Gymraes. Chwilio am hunaniaeth o fewn diwylliant amrywiol Cymru.

Mae fy magwraeth mewn cwm diwydiannol wedi'i hargraffu'n ddwfn ac yn ddi-droi-yn-ðl ar fy mywyd. A minnau yn byw yn awr mewn ardal wledig ynghanol y Gymru Gymraeg, ardal a drwythwyd gan hen lenyddiaeth a cherddoriaeth, chwedlau ac iaith, yr wyf yn ceisio deall yr amrywiaeth sydd ym mywyd Cymru drwy'r arddangosfa hon.

Mynegir y bererindod hon yn rhannol drwy baentiadau a darluniau o Fenywod Cymru, sef ymgais i gydnabod cyfraniad menywod i fywyd cymdeithasol, gwleidyddol a diwylliannol Cymru — yn lleol ac yn genedlaethol.

Brithir y gyfres hon o bortreadau gan ddelweddau, sydd mewn gwirionedd yn hunan-bortreadau hanesiol, sy'n cyfleo fy ymwybyddiaeth o fod yn Gymraes, sef Cymreictod.

So much discussion about 'Cymreictod', about being Welsh, is conducted as though Welshness is an absolute quality which can be set down upon the tablets rather than something which is made up of many different elements, something which we experience and acknowledge more easily than we can define. Chris Kinsey's exhibition reflects one woman's attempts to examine her own consciousness of feeling Welsh — rather than British — an attempt to name herself, her roots, her place in the world and to say something about their meaning in her life. Perhaps also to ask why. To try to find out what sense of place, of history, of belonging imbues us with the sense that this, rather than any other, is our place in the world.

The debate about Welshness is often coloured by arguments about the extent to which speaking the language is an essential qualification for being Welsh. The wordless art of painting liberates us from that arena of discussion and allows us to look for less concrete attributes — a quality in the face, certain affinities... Certainly it is possible to identify such a thing as a Welsh face. It leaps out at us occasionally from the television or from a street in a Welsh market town, a particular arrangement of features which speaks to us of Welsh genealogy but the faces which Chris has assembled speak to us of more than a shared accident of genes and history. For some of these women the consciousness of being Welsh has been in the foreground of their lives dictating causes to be fought — a public arena in which to contend. For others the knowledge of Welshness has been implicit, a given, a coloured thread in the everyday weave of life.

There is something very moving about this collection of portraits — this record of so many different lives and relationships across the generations. Each face bears witness, carries the imprint of the particular life experience. The special shock of this exhibition is that the faces which command our attention are women's faces. We have so little access to information about the lives of our mothers and grandmothers, lives which have so often been submerged by the patriarchal view of history. These paintings help to make her story visible and in so doing celebrate the value of the ordinary, which is usually unsung. Indeed, if you look properly at these portraits you can see how ordinariness becomes extra ordinary in the strength and stamina which has allowed so many of these women to triumph over the hardships of their everyday lives.

It is to be hoped that one of the effects of this powerful exhibition will be to draw attention to the paintings by and about Welsh women which exist in the National collection and which do not get the prominence which they deserve — not to mention the portraits of women which must be hidden away in girls' schools and similar institutions throughout Wales!

Another element in these paintings is Chris Kinsey's response to a sense of place. In her own life she is reconciling her past experience of industrial English speaking Wales with her present knowledge of rural Welsh speaking Wales and these different aspects of Wales are visible in her work. The connection between place and 'Cymreictod' is an elusive one but the instinctive and spiritual dimension of these paintings illuminates the affinity with landscape which for so many of us bears upon our sense of personal identity — an affinity which can be as easily identified with an industrial view as with a lake or a mountain. My own sense of 'Cymreictod', which has been chosen rather than inherited, is inextricably bound up with a sense of place. I was not born in Wales but have lived here for most of my life, nourished originally by the idea that Welshness was somehow to do with Dylan Thomas and rugby, and coming later, particularly through my relationships with other Welsh people and through my work in the arts to a much deeper sense of what constitutes Welshness and the certainty that this is my place in the world. Consequently the concerns which Chris is exploring are very real to me. By coincidence, as I write this, I am working on a new play called BRANWEN, which is based on a story from the Mabinogi. All the Mabinogi heroines are portrayed as passive individuals, but this dramatic version explores what was really happening to Branwen, who sacrificed so much for her own sense of place and identity, like so many other Welsh women.

Similarly, in this exhibition, the lives and passions, sacrifices and joys of these other Welsh women are reclaimed from invisibility and celebrated as a testimony for their posterity and for their own 'Cymreictod.'

Gilly Adams
June 1989

Mae cymaint o'r drafodaeth ar Gymreictod, ar beth yw bod yn Gymraes neu'n Gymro, yn mynd yn ei blaen fel pe bai Cymreictod yn ansawdd absoliwt y gellir ei harysgrifio ar y llechi yn hytrach na rhywbeth sy'n cynnwys llu o wahanol elfennau, rhywbeth haws ei brofi a'i gydnabod nag ei ddiffinio. Mae arddangosfa Chris Kinsey yn adlewyrchu ymdrechion un fenyw i archwilio ei hymwybyddiaeth ei hun o fod yn Gymraes — yn hytrach na Phrydeinwraig — ymgais i'w henwi ei hun, ei gwreiddiau, ei lle yn y byd a dweud rhywbeth am ystyr hynny yn ei bywyd. Efallai hefyd i ofyn pam. I geisio dargansod pa ymdeimlad o le, o hanes, o berthyn sy'n ein llenwi â'r ymdeimlad mai hwn, yn hytrach nag unrhyw fan arall, yw ein lle yn y byd.

Lliwir y drafodaeth ar Gymreictod yn fynych iawn gan ddadleuon ynglŷn ag i ba raddau y mae medru'r iaith yn gymhwyster hanfodol er cydnabod rhywun fel Cymraes neu Gymro. Mae celfyddyd ddi-eiriau peintio yn ein gollwng yn rhydd o hynny ac yn caniatau i ni edrych am briodoledau llai diriaethol — ansawdd mewn wyneb, ymlyniad neilltuol... Yn sicr, mae'n bosibl adnabod y fath beth ag wyneb Cymreig. Bydd yn llamu i'n golwg o bryd i'w gilydd o'r teledu neu ar y stryd mewn tref farchnad Gymreig, wynepryd neilltuol sydd yn awgrymu achau Cymreig, ond mae'r wynebau y mac Chris wedi eu crynhoi yn son wrthym am fwy na genynnau a hanes cyffredin yr ydym yn digwydd ei rannu ag eraill. I rai o'r menywod hyn, bu'r ymwybyddiaeth o Gymreictod yn flaenllaw yn eu bywydau, yn pennu'r achosion i frwydro drostynt — arena gyhoeddus i ymgyrchu ynddi. I eraill, bu'r wybodaeth o Gymreictod yn beth ymhlyg, edefyn o liw yng ngwead beunyddiol bywyd.

Mae rhywbeth teimladwy iawn ynglŷn â'r casgliad hwn o bôrtreadau — y cyfnod hwn o gymaint o wahanol fywydau a pherthnasau ar draws y cenedlaethau. Mae pob wyneb yn dystio i brofiad neilltuol o fywyd, yn dwyn ôl y profiad neilltuol hwnnw. Yr hyn sy'n ysgytvol ynglŷn â'r arddangosfa hon yw'r ffaith mai wynebau menywod yw'r wynebau sy'n dal ein sylw. Mae gennym gyn lleied o wybodaeth am fywydau ein mamau a'n neiniau, bywydau a foddyd mor fynych gan yr olwg batriarchaidd ar hanes. Mae'r peintiadau hyn yn cynorthwyo i wneud hanes menywod yn weladwy ac wrth wneud hynny, mae'n dathlu gwerth y cyffredin, nas clodforir fel arfer. Yn wir, os edrychwch yn iawn ar y portreadau hyn gellwch weld sut yr â'r cyffredin yn anghyffredin yn y cryfder a'r dyfal-barhad sydd wedi galluogi cymaint o'r menywod hyn i oresgyn caledi eu bywydau beunyddiol.

Gobeithio mai un o effeithiau'r arddangosfa rymus hon fydd tynnu sylw at y peintiadau o fenywod Cymreig a pheintiadau ganddynt sydd yn y casgliad cenedlaethol ac na roddir iddynt yr amlygrwydd y maent yn ei haeddu — heb son am y portreadau o fenywod sydd, mae'n rhaid, yng'hudd mewn ysgolion merched a sefyliadau cyffelyb ym mhob cwr a chorwel o Gymru!

Elfen arall yn y peintiadau hyn yw ymateb Chris Kinsey i ymdeimlad o le. Yn ei bywyd ei hun, mae'n cymodi profiad ei gorffennol yn y Gymru ddi-Gymraeg ddiwydiannol a'i phrofiad presennol o'r Gymru wledig Gymraeg ei hiaith, ac mae'r agweddua gwahanol hyn ar Gymru i'w gweld yn ei gwaith. Mae'r cysylltiad rhwng lle a "Chymreictod" yn un anodd dal gafael arno, ond mae dimensiwn greddfyl ac ysbrydol y peintiadau hyn yn taflu goleuni ar yr ymlyniad â thirlun sydd i gymaint ohonom yn dylanwad ar ein hymdeimlad o hunaniaeth bersonol — ymlyniad a all fod â golygfa ddiwydiannol lawn cymaint ag â llyn neu fynydd.

Mae fy ymdeimlad innau o Gymreictod, a ddewiswyd yn hytrach na'i etifeddu, yn gwbl anwahanadwy oddi wrth ymdeimlad o le. Ni'm ganed yng Nghymru ond rwyf wedi treulio'r rhan fwyaf o'm bywyd yn byw yma, gyda'r syniad wedi ei feithrin yn wreiddiol bod a wnelo Cymreictod mewn rhyw fodd â Dylan Thomas a rygbi, cyn dod yn ddiweddarach, yn enwedig drwy fy mherthynas â Chymry eraill a thrwy fy ngwaith yn y celfyddydau, i ymdeimlad llawer dynfach o'r hyn sy'n ffurffio Cymreictod a'r sicrwydd mai dyma fy lle i yn y byd. O ganlyniad, mae'r materion y mae Chris yn eu harchwilio yn real iawn i mi. Drwy gyd-ddigwyddiad, wrth i mi ysgrifennu hyn o lith, yr wyf yn gweithio ar ddrama newydd, BRANWEN, yn seiliedig ar Ail Gainc y Mabinogi. Portreadir holl arwresau'r Mabinogi fel unigolion goddefol, ond mae'r fersiwn ddramatig hon yn archwilio beth oedd yn digwydd i Branwen go iawn, a aberthodd gymaint er mwyn ei hymdeimlad ei hun o le a hunaniaeth, fel cymaint o fenywod Cymreig eraill.

Yn yr un modd, yn yr arddangosfa hon, ail-hawlir bywyd ac angerdd, aberth a llawenydd y menywod Cymreig eraill yma o'u cyflwr anweledig a'u dathlu fel dystiolaeth a fydd byw fyfth am eu Cymreictod eu hunain.
